JIN Data Extract (JINDEX)

To reflect the fact that the service under construction contains case information as well as criminal history, I have renamed the project. I believe that the new name has excellent marketing potential and that it may eventually come to represent a set of readily accessible services.

Online continued to gather customer requirements, submitting a detailed template of needed information to AOC, which Tom Clarke graciously agreed to complete within the proposed seven day deadline. They also reviewed source code extracts from Summary Offender Profile (see below) to determine their utility to the task at hand. The deadline for the Customer Requirements Report was extended from December 3 to 13 but this should not affect any of the 2005 deliverable dates.

Finally, we discussed the Law Enforcement Support Agency (LESA) ACCESS interface with Mark Knutson. The work done by LESA in interfacing with the WSP switch is extremely relevant to the JINDEX efforts. LESA agreed in principle to share the source code for their interface with JIN, along with the possibility of making the interface available to other members of the community. The license agreements should be finalized by Monday, and there is a lot of logistical work ahead regarding further sharing, but I am extremely grateful for LESA's willingness to share with the JIN some examples of the technology that has made them a leader in the integrated justice community.

Summary Offender Profile (SOP)

I have made a formal request to Templar to provide all of the code prepared for the SOP application, as well as some other documentation and consulting time as a replacement to their current contract to add the JBRS data to SOP. We have agreed in principle to this course of action and are now into the negotiations stage.

I also presented SOP to Marc Lamoreaux, Gregory Miller and Brian Ursino of the WSP. All showed interest and we have commenced plans for a pilot deployment to selected WSP investigative staff.

Electronic Citations

I met with Carrie Tellefson, the new legislative liaison for DIS, and Dirk Marler of the AOC to discuss the development of a plan for statutory changes needed to abolish signature requirements for citations. I will try to convene a meeting of legislative staff throughout the JIN community to explore this further.

Miscellaneous

I met with Jim Parsons and Steve Arndt to discuss integration efforts in Clark County.
